47♂, 4♀ - (Map to left in Field Notebook) All males congregating on an open area (no sage) about 3/4 mile from Highway 395 - visible from Highway despite the distance. Approached to within 100 yards before they flushed. The display was really incredible. The popping sound, produced by the sage grouse's trachea, trachea, and inflating enormous throat sac, could be heard for hundreds of yards. Sage Grouse were surprisingly efficient in the air - they made flights of over one mile going away from the left and the wingbeats were measured and powerful, not the buzzy pheasant-type of flight. Perhaps Sage Grouse need to cover much larger pieces of ground than other Galliformes.

3 glimpsed as it flew overhead. Mrs Rosegay led us to a known nesting site where we waited until dark in hopes of seeing them fly in but no luck. At 2100 I began doing my imitations and within 15 minutes we had two birds right above us. One was hooting and the other gave a curious rising whistle, like Peterson record. When the birds first arrived, the hooter (♂?) gave a 4-noted hoot:

hooooo (1 sec) hoo - hoo (1 sec) hooooo

This was given several times, and I gave the same calls back to him. After 4-5 repetitions, he began a more rapid rising crescendo of hoots, speeding up at end. Never finished a series of hoots without breaking the sequence abruptly with some lower notes. We had both birds calling at us and answering us for 15 minutes. Never came closer than 75-100 feet although they were obviously excited. We saw both birds as they flew overhead - only silhouettes.

Common Loon

Yellow-billed Loon

seeing all four loons in June plus seven species of swallows in same day must be some kind of record

1 - non-breeding plumage, Princeton Harbor

1 - imm. Princeton Harbor - with Common Loon for comparison - the bird's bill was so much bigger (and the bird itself was so much larger) that I originally thought the Yellow-billed was a Common and the Common an Arctic (from Sootys). Both were in non-breeding plumage, but the Yellow-billed Loon was longer bodied, longer necked, and conspicuously longer-billed than the Common. It held its bill upward at an angle, giving it a much different aspect from the horizontal-billed Common.

The bill was all yellow except for a dark smudge on the proximal

3/5 of the culmen. The culmen had a slight <sup>down</sup> curve to it at the tip, indicating it was an immature. The back was paler than the Common's and had broader lateral pale barring. The nape was slightly pale brown but very inconspicuously so. The head pattern was quite distinctive bill held upward

at an angle

We chartered a skiff ($100) and approached the bird to within 50 feet, getting fantastic views of both. They were the only birds in the harbor and are probably going to summer there.

First ♂ was located by song in pinyon juniper slopes. Watched carefully for 10-15 minutes - looked more like a Gray Flycatcher than any other bird. It was singing from 3-4 song perches - remained in very small area the whole time. Song like Solitary but slower, more, less variable and with more downward-inflected notes. Head, wings dark gray except for faint white eye ring, containing bar underparts paler gray. Two other singing birds located nearby, one of which was watched for 5 min from 15-30' away - fantastic views nest with young 25' up in Red Fir.

 One bird was very silent and was feeding the young. The other bird was very vocal, giving a loud "phee" call reminiscent of a Pinyon Nuthatch call. The vocal bird was constantly flicking its wings and raising tail to horizontal simultaneously - the other bird was not doing this flicking. The birds appeared shorter-tailed and bigger-headed than other Empidonax. Head looked very brownish. Chest light gray-brown, belly yellowish with tongue projecting up center of breast.

Red-tailed Hawk

Pygmy Owl

1 responded to my imitations which I was doing to attract small birds, this all at about 1030. It flew in from quite a distance and was located by Susanne sitting in the tops of pines - it followed us until we left the area, tracking us for over a mile while I was calling to it. It would never come close to the ground. It was almost continually harassed by small birds. We attracted it to the parking lot where we set up a scope on it and watched it for several minutes. Besides the "toot" call, it gave a rapid series of "chups" after landing at a new perch.
